

ABSTRACT

A method by which a supplier can rank software product requirements, an algorithm for determining the rankings, and computer program products for implementing the method and algorithm. A requirement is described with reference to customer interest categories. For each category, supplier metrics are evaluated, to provide partial scores. An overall score is then determined from the partial scores, and various products competing for common resources are ranked according to their overall scores.